Fondée en 1900, la Revue d'histoire ecclésiastique présente des articles couvrant la totalité de l'histoire du christianisme. Tous ces articles sont basés sur une recherche originale à partir de sources et développent souvent des aspects novateurs en matière de méthodologie historique. Ils sont publiés essentiellement en français et en anglais, exceptionnellement en allemand. Outre ces articles, la Revue propose au lecteur des recensions de livres récents traitant d'histoire de l'Église au sens large sous forme de comptes rendus critiques ou de notices brèves descriptives. Ces recensions ambitionnent de couvrir les plus importantes publications de ce secteur. S'y ajoute une chronique décrivant par pays les colloques, distinctions, thèses de doctorat, etc.

All of these articles are based on original source research and often develop innovative aspects in the area of historical methodology. They are published essentially in French and English, and exceptionally in German. Besides its articles, the Revue offers the reader recensions of recent books dealing with Church history in the large sense, in the form of critical reviews or brief descriptions. These recensions try to cover the most important publications in this sector. Added to that is a chronicle describing, by country, conferences, distinctions, doctoral theses, etc.

Review

"The best international church-historical journal is Revue d'Histoire Ecclesiastique, which, like Ephemerides, is published at Louvain [...] Though written primarily in French, it covers literature of all countries, the majority of articles being in French or in English. It is the bibliographical breadth of the Revue, however, that is stunning. It does far more than any other journal with reviewing research, including work in progress at various universities in Europe. It reviews articles and frequently offers critiques; and it reviews a greater number of books than any other journal of church history. It is therefore the standard work, although written in foreign languages, for virtually all scholars working in church history."
