EXCHANGES AND INTERACTIONS IN THE ARTS OF MEDIEVAL EUROPE, BYZANTIUM, AND THE MEDITERRANEAN

Published by: Masarykova univerzita, Université de Lausanne, Academy of Sciences of the Czech Republic

ISSN 2336-3452

Convivium has honored the legacy of Nikodim Pavlovich Kondakov (1844–1925) since its launch in 2014, building on groundwork laid by a scholar esteemed as a founder of Byzantine studies. Kondakov's followers sought to perpetuate his work and ideals by publishing Seminarium Kondakovianum. Already looking westward from Russia, Seminarium appeared regularly until World War II silenced it in 1941.

Convivium's peer-reviewed articles reflect thorough knowledge of the literature relevant to the topics studied – religious and secular structures, images, and texts – but the journal welcomes diverse approaches and methodologies: it thus provides a forum for exposure of and exchange over new ideas. Some essays also evoke the personal responses of their subjects' effects on the people for whom they were created – medieval artifacts and experience under a twenty-first century lens.

Based in the Czech city of Brno, Convivium is characterized by breadth of scope. It overlooks boundaries – geographic, temporal, and academic – while retaining the history of art as its nucleus. Convivium's editors and contributors, representing three continents and seven decades in age, extend its purview into western Asia, the Mediterranean basin, and the rest of Central and Western Europe. At the same time, it retains its focus on the Middle Ages – a period construed to encompass the third century to the sixteenth.

Convivium publishes two issues each year, plus occasional special volumes, and invites new submissions.
