Brepols promotes your book to the scholarly market in numerous ways. We market your book in both off- and online mailings to our contacts, external lists and distribute marketing materials at relevant conferences worldwide. We send out review copies to specialized journals and websites, attend conferences with book stalls, feature your book in various thematic and general catalogues or leaflets and we can also select your book for targeted advertisements in periodicals, conference programmes and other media. Additionally, we forward all relevant information on your book to our distributors in various parts of the world who market your publication independently.

Timing
The promotion of your book starts around 6 months in advance of the publication date. A notice on your book is included in our forthcoming titles catalogue that appears 3 times a year and presents our publication program for the Spring, Autumn and Winter period. 120 days before publication, a dedicated webpage of your book on www.brepols.net becomes available.

Reviews
We provide review copies of your book to relevant publications shortly after it gets published. You are also invited to make suggestions (3 months in advance of publication) on journals that might have a particular interest in publishing a review on your book.

Academic journals can take some time to review a book, so take this into account. We obtain copies of most published reviews right after publication, but if you come across a review on your book that you think we may not have seen, please forward them to us. We take quotes from these reviews and include them on the webpage of the book and they are also used in other marketing channels.

Conferences
Conferences offer important opportunities to promote your book. Brepols attends yearly numerous events worldwide and sends marketing materials to many more. Let us know in advance if you are attending a conference or giving a paper. In case we are attending the conference with a bookstall, we will ensure your book will be available. If we are not present, we can provide you with leaflets to take with you and offer a discount to all delegates. It is essential to contact us at least 2 months in advance and provide us with the necessary details of the event.

Social Media
Brepols is active on Facebook and Twitter and attracts an ever-growing number of followers on both platforms each day. Look for ‘Brepols’ / @brepols and like/ follow our account. We regularly post notices on new publications or distribute information on forthcoming projects.

Promoting your own publication

As an author you have a unique position in spreading news about your recently published book to your own (scholarly) networks and contacts. Below you can find some ideas on what you, as an author, can do to promote your book. These are merely suggestions and we leave it entirely up to you whether or not you want to use them.

Link to the webpage of your book
Update your list of publications on your own university or departmental website. Link directly to your book on www.brepols.net to stimulate the discoverability of your publication.

Conferences, Presentations & Talks
Mention your book in talks or (conference) presentations. You can even include it in your talks.

Social Media
Do you tweet, manage a personal blog or actively update your Facebook or Academia.edu profile? Why not post a notice on your book so your contacts are aware of your latest work? Perhaps you can include a table of contents and a link to the Brepols website?

Add a link in your email signature
A simple but effective way of informing your acquaintances about your book is including a link in your email signature to your book on the Brepols website. That way your colleagues and other contacts can easily access all available information directly on the Brepols website.

Book Prizes
Winning a book prize can generate a lot of publicity for your publication. Contact us if you believe your book has a reasonable chance of winning a specific prize. Take into account that each prize will have a panel of judges and a free copy will be required for each. As these panels can be quite large, we ask you to be very selective in your suggestions, focus on prizes that are most relevant in your field of study and make sure your book qualifies to all conditions of the competition.
