OUTREMER Studies in the Crusades and the Latin East

Series Editor:
Alan V. Murray

The Expansion of the Faith Crusading on the Frontiers of Latin Christendom in the High Middle Ages

Paul Srodecki, Norbert Kersken (eds)

350 p., 28 b/w ills, ISBN 978-2-503-58880-3
Book Series: Outremer. Studies in the Crusades and the Latin East, vol. 14

This volume offers a comparative approach to the crusade movement on the frontiers of Latin Christendom in the high Middle Ages, bringing a regional focus to research on these peripheral phenomena. The eighteen papers, ranging in scope from the southern and eastern Baltic regions to Iberia, Egypt and the Balkans, provide new insights into the ways in which crusade rhetoric was reflected in the culture and literature of countries involved in crusading beyond the Holy Land.

REVIEW

"Humbert's treatise thus presents a bewilderingly rich array of materials which should prove fruitful for historians of crusade preaching and the impact of crusading on Latin Christian identity and devotion in the thirteenth century."

The King of Cyprus, Peter I of Lusignan (1359-1369), was one of the most fascinating figures in the history of the Latin East and the later crusades. He was involved in European power politics, his crusading activities brought him into conflict with the Turkish beyliks of Anatolia and the Mamluk sultanate of Egypt, and his rule was closely linked with broader developments in the Eastern Mediterranean, such as the decay of Byzantium, the East-West schism, and the beginning of the Ottoman expansion in the Balkans.
