CONVIVIUM

micrographies

This series of short volumes – about 25,000 words and 40 color illustrations – complements the Convivium journal and its Supplementa. It presents a range of diverse topics to stimulate critical debate. The idea is to produce small books that prompt discussion of fundamental questions in art history to provoke, stimulate, and intrigue the reader as well as encourage scholarly debate.

Convivium revives the proud heritage of Seminarium Kondakovianum, the eponymous journal issued in Prague in 1927 by the Seminarium Kondakovianum, an institute founded to honor and perpetuate the legacy of Nikodim Kondakov. Largely through the journal, Kondakov's pioneering scholarship in Byzantine and medieval studies was known and celebrated throughout the Russian and Czech milieu and Western Europe.

Resurrecting the spirit of Seminarium Kondakovianum, Convivium vigorously fosters the interests linking Eastern and Western Europe by emphasizing the cultural roots shared throughout the Mediterranean region. It covers an extensive time span, from the Early Christian period to the Late Middle Ages, which, in Central Europe, lasted well beyond the Italian Renaissance. With history of art as Convivium's nucleus, the journal explores widely diverse subjects pertaining to images – objects and monuments, and the diverse forms of their creation, use, appreciation, or experience. Accordingly, its scope encompasses various disciplines allied with art history – anthropology, archaeology, historiography, liturgy, and, of course, history itself. The editors' aim is to ensure that Convivium provides a broad, clear insight into its topics and the research methods used to analyze them.

The scholars and institutions engaged in publishing Convivium represent several countries and disciplines, and therefore give the periodical diverse perspectives. The editorial board comprises noted scholars affiliated with Czech, Italian, French, Swiss, and American academic institutions. The journal is published collaboratively by the Centre for Early Medieval Studies at the Masaryk University in Brno, the Czech Republic's Institute of Art History at the Academy of Sciences of, and the University of Lausanne.

Supplementum

Book Series

Convivium Supplementum is an edited volume series that complements the scholarly framework of the journal Convivium. Convivium Supplementum offers a broad interdisciplinary platform for original research in various disciplines, including, but not limited to, art history, anthropology, archaeology, historiography, literary studies, theology, and history. The temporal framework of the series is based on the broadest possible definition of the Middle Ages, ranging from the third to the sixteenth century and from continental Europe to the Mediterranean and West Asia.
